Our Projects
We focus our work in eight conservation hubs, or key regions around the world where we can have the greatest collaborative impact to save and protect wildlife.

Rhinoceros
We are working with local community partners in Kenya to protect rhinos from poaching and wildlife trafficking. At our Rhino Rescue Center here in San Diego, we are developing and applying the genetic science needed to save northern white rhinos from extinction.

Elephant
One of the many detrimental effects of elephant poaching is that young calves are left orphaned. We are supporting our partners at the Reteti Elephant Sanctuary in northern Kenya in efforts to rescue, rehabilitate, and return these young elephants.

Tiger
As tigers among the most endangered animals on Earth, killed for their body parts and because they sometimes come into villages in search of food. We are aligning with partners in the regions where tigers live to protect their habitat, and to share education with local communities.

Platypus
Australia is subject to increasing threats from wildfires, much like California. The platypus is one species affected by the resulting habitat loss and droughts that dry up the waterways they depend on. We are working partners in assessing and protecting their remaining habitat.
