Our Projects

We focus our work in eight Conservation Hubs, or key regions around the world where we can have the greatest collaborative impact to save and protect wildlife.

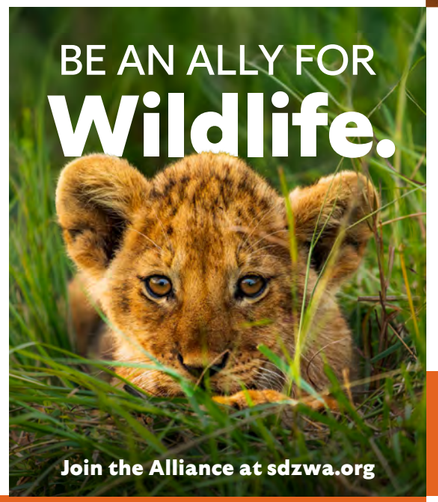

Elephant
One of the many detrimental effects of elephant poaching is that young calves are left orphaned. We are supporting our partners at the Reteti Elephant Sanctuary in northern Kenya in efforts to rescue, rehabilitate, and rewild these young elephants.

Platypus
Australia is subject to increasing threats from wildfires, much like California. The platypus is one species affected by the resulting habitat loss and droughts that dry up the waterways they depend on. We are aiding partners in assessing and protecting their remaining habitat.

Rhino
All rhino species are endangered. We work with conservationists worldwide and local communities to protect their native habitat and save this keystone species. A global leader in rhino conservation, we are developing groundbreaking technology and sustainable solutions to reintroduce entire herds of this iconic species back into native ranges.

Tiger
Asia's tigers are among the most endangered animals on Earth, killed for their body parts and because they sometimes come into villages in search of food. We are allying with partners in the regions where tigers live to protect their habitat, and to share education with local communities.
